Live and on-demand on policyreview.tv

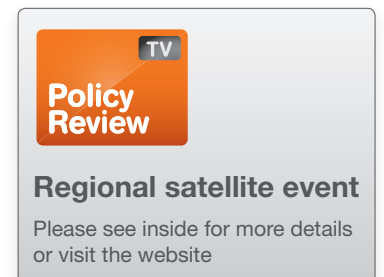

Social work reform is moving up the political agenda. The Government has not only accepted the 15 recommendations of the Social Work Task Force, but has also commissioned Professor Eileen Munro to conduct a review of child protection which focuses on the role of frontline social workers. An interim report is due in January 2011: this conference will provide you with one of the first opportunities to discuss the review's recommendations, and their implications for the social work workforce.

You will hear first hand how the College of Social Work will take forward the work of the Social Work Reform Board; see how to deliver a career structure for social workers which can aid retention; share good practice, promote understanding from serious case reviews, and discuss the latest policy and guidance.

Purpose of the Conference:

To discuss the Munro Review's initial findings and prepare for policy changes over the coming months; to provide local authorities and private providers with the skills to recruit and retain social workers under new government guidelines

Specifically this conference will:

- Explore initial findings from the Munro report
- Analyse the Social Work Task Force's recommendations and their possible implications on social worker employers
- Give an introduction into the new and independent college for social work, led and owned by the profession
- Assess the success so far of the Newly Qualified Social Worker pilot.
- Explore the implications of a new standard for employers to ensure that they put in place the conditions that social workers need to practice effectively
- Outline best practice in the delivery of a career structure for social workers so that experienced practitioners can progress in front line roles as well as management
- Look to Graduate Recruitment and Step Up to Social Work schemes to encourage high quality graduates to train to be social workers.
- Explore the effectiveness of national campaigns to change the face of social work and increase recruitment rates
- Explore the radical reforms proposed in the BASW Social Work Bill
- Discuss the current shortage of social workers. What are we lacking? What are the implications?
- Look at how social work is regulated and the role employers play in regulation
