Live and on-demand on policyreview.tv

With funding for Aimhigher due to end in July 2011, schools, colleges and HE institutions will be responsible for developing and maintaining individual partnerships. How will your organisation broker and maintain successful partnerships in the coming months?

The government's support for widening participation includes new guidance for access agreements, but some important questions remain around funding, and the support and resources HEIs will need to make available for them.

Hear from HE institutions leading the way on partnerships, who are already working independently with schools in sustainable ways that go beyond raising aspirations, such as curriculum enrichment, CPD for teachers, and support for the gifted and talented programme.

This conference will bring together vice-chancellors, head teachers and college principals, along with all those involved in partnerships and widening participation, to discuss the latest policy developments and the future for partnership working.

Purpose of the Conference:

Specifically this conference will:

- Map the changing policy landscape for both HEIs and schools, in light of the Browne Review and the Schools White Paper
- Explore new ways of working directly with schools after the dissolution of Aimhigher, and how HEIs can work together to broker and maintain partnerships with local schools and colleges
- Examine how HEIs can work together, pooling resources to develop partnerships
- Examine the needs of different types of schools, including specialist schools and academies
- Outline strategies for successful partnerships outside the widening participation agenda, including curriculum enrichment, CPD for teachers, support for the English Baccalaureate and bringing research into the classroom
- Hear from a pilot project exploring direct funding to schools for collaboration with HEIs
- Hear from OFFA on the specific obligations HEIs will have for outreach activities under the new access agreements
- Provide an opportunity to network with others working to develop and maintain partnerships between schools and HE
